4.3 Word Press & Woo Commerce Cookies (www.roastandgrounddirect.co.uk)

TO BE CHECKED WITH REHAN

roastandgrounddirect.co.uk uses Word Press and Woo Commerce for transactional elements.

Word Press

By default, WordPress generates two types of cookies unless you tell it to do otherwise.

These include:

1. Session cookies. These save you from having to log in over and over again on the same sites.

2. Comments cookies. Whenever you comment on a WordPress website, it will save some of your details so you don't have to re-enter them later. That can include your username, email address, and more.

WordPress plugins and other third-party tools also make extensive use of cookies. Likewise, analytics plugins tend to use cookies to store user behaviour data.

WooCommerce

Cookies depend on specific features that are enabled on a store. The cookies are active when a user interacts with one of these features or to allow admin functions to be performed from within the store's dashboard (/wp-admin). Details are provided in tables below, listing various cookies that are set for users of stores with the WooCommerce plugin installed.

Store front end:

COOKIE NAME	DURATION	PURPOSE

woocommerce_items_in_cart	session	Helps WooCommerce determine when cart contents/data changes.

woocommerce_recently_viewed	session	Powers the Recent Viewed Products widget.
store_notice[notice id]	session	Allows customers to dismiss the Store Notice .

No personal information is stored within these cookies.

woocommerce_dismissed_suggestions__[context]	1 month	Count of suggestion dismissals, if enabled.
tk_ai	session	Stores a randomly-generated anonymous ID. This is only used within the dashboard (/wp-admin) area and is used for usage tracking, if enabled.

4.4 Google Cookies

__utma

This is the main way Google Analytics tracks unique visitors. Stored in this cookie is a unique visitor ID, the date and time of their first visit, the time their current visit started and the total number of visits they have made. The `__utma` cookie is a persistent cookie that expires in two years. With each new visit, the expiration date is refreshed.

`__utmb`

This is how Google Analytics decides whether a visit has timed out and also how deep a visit has gotten. It stores the number of pageviews in the current visit and the start time of the visitor's current visit. The `__utmb` cookie is a persistent cookie that expires in 30 minutes. Each pageview refreshes it.

`__utmc`

The `__utmc` cookie is the only session cookie used by Google Analytics. Its only purpose is to register that the visit ended if the browser gets closed.

`__utmz`

This is the traffic source cookie. It contains all of the traffic source information for the current visit, if it was different from the previous visit. If no traffic source information can be found for the current visit, the cookie is not changed. This is the way that Google Analytics attributes visit information, including conversions and transactions to a traffic source. It does not contain historical information for previous sources. This is a persistent cookie with a catch: it expires in six months and is only refreshed when the traffic source changes. Every other cookie is refreshed with each pageview. The impact of this is that a banner ad that brings a visitor to your site will get the credit for all future direct visits for up to six months. After six months, if there have not been visits from any other source, the cookie will expire and start to attribute information to direct visits.

`__utmv`

This is the user-defined variable cookie. Developers can segment visitors by custom variables by calling a native JavaScript method. This new variable gets stored in a persistent cookie which expires in two years.
