

Petzl Recalls Safety Ropes

The Low-Stretch Kernmantle Ropes have been recalled due to the risk of the rope failing, resulting in a fall and injury hazard

On September 30, 2020, Petzl issued a recall of their Low-Stretch Kernmantle Ropes. This impacts approximately 14,480 units. The rope can have a deep cut or tape securing two ends of the rope together, which can cause the rope to fail.

The recalled low-stretch kernmantle ropes are designed for professional use, including work-at-height use, difficult access, technical rescue and industrial applications; and for recreational use, including climbing, caving and mountaineering. The ropes have a nylon core and polyester sheath material. Only ropes with serial numbers ranging between 18 C 0000000 000 and 20 H 0000000 000 are included in the recall. The recalled rope models include:
