

Rodrigo Mariño,
D.M.D. PhD

Biography

Professor of Population Oral Health at the Melbourne Dental School

Rodrigo Mariño is a public health dentist, Professor of Population Oral Health at the Melbourne Dental School, The University of Melbourne where he has worked since 2004. Rodrigo has a dental degree from the University of Chile, a Master's in public health, and a PhD from the University of Melbourne.

Rodrigo's research strongly focuses on oral health promotion and reducing inequalities in oral health status. Rodrigo has excellent research expertise in social epidemiology, dental workforce issues, public health, migrant health, Information and Communication Technology, gerontology, and population oral health.

He has established links and maintain continuous contact and research activities with major research and academic groups in Australia and overseas Rodrigo has published more than 150 papers in scientific journals, several major research reports and 34 Books Chapters.

Rodrigo was the founder and first President, of the e-Oral Health Research Network, IADR, and member of the editorial board of three international, peer-reviewed journals. Rodrigo has also been a consultant to the Pan American Health Organization/World Health Organization in Washington, DC.