Zimbabwe Monthly Briefing December 2020

Zimbabwe Summary 10 December 2020

Governance ranking improves amid continuing anti-corruption efforts

President Emmerson Mnangagwa (2017-present) has declared that Zimbabwe is “on the brink of greatness”, based on the country’s ranking in the Ibrahim Index of African Governance (IIAG) as one of the five most improved governance systems in Africa during the last decade (2010-2019). With an overall score of 46%, and +7.4 improvement, the IIAG currently rates Zimbabwe 33rd out of Africa’s 54 countries.1

However, corruption continues to undermine Zimbabwe’s economic development, stifling the rule of law and impeding good governance. During the launch of the Judicial Services Commission (JSC) Strategic Plan (2021 to 2025) on 2 December, Mnangagwa noted that the JSC has a critical role to play in Zimbabwe’s fight against corruption in accelerating the conclusion of corruption cases. Mnangagwa said the JSC will contribute towards the state’s aim to “pursue a development agenda anchored on strong, responsive and transparent institutions”.2

Chief Justice Luke Malaba said:

“The commission seeks to develop an independent, financially autonomous and sustainable, modern and efficient judiciary that is enthusiastically accountable to the public in its pursuit of a society in which the rule of law prevails.”3

Sceptics, however, claim the judicial system is an enabler of state-linked corruption. In 2018 Malaba declared Mnangagwa as the duly elected president of Zimbabwe, despite the bid of then Movement for Democratic Change (MDC)-Alliance leader Nelson Chamisa to have the 2018 presidential election results annulled, citing electoral fraud. Opposition parties have since then perceived Malaba to be an ally of the ruling Zimbabwe African National Union-Patriotic Front (ZANU-PF).

Critics also claim that strategic appointments to the Zimbabwe Anti-Corruption Commission (ZACC), mandated to investigate corruption by top officials, ensure protection of Mnangagwa’s allies. The ZACC is headed by Justice Loice Matanda-Moyo, wife of ZANU-PF member and foreign affairs and international trade (MoFAIT) minister Lieutenant General (Rtd), Dr Sibusiso Moyo. Protracted trials of political figures by the ZACC continue to diminish confidence in Mnangagwa’s anti-corruption campaign. In July 2019 Prisca Mupfumira became the first sitting member of cabinet to be arrested for corruption in connection with $94m that went missing from a pension fund when she was serving as a director at the National Social Security...

Authority (NSSA). Mufumira is currently on trial, serving as a litmus test for the ZACC to assure stakeholders of its transparency and deterrent effect.

Exposing corruption remains fraught with risk, despite the ZACC’s call for whistle-blower alerts and whistle-blower protection. Independent journalist and anti-corruption campaigner Hopewell Chin’ono has faced arrests and intimidation following his exposure of corruption related to contracts for the $60m acquisition of COVID-19 protective healthcare equipment. Chin’ono linked the first family and ZANU-PF to the scandal, without implicating his sources. However, the ZACC is instead investigating deputy minister of health and child care Dr John Mangwiro for alleged interference in the bidding process for the supply of COVID-19 related materials. Mangwiro is accused of blocking Chinese company Young Health Care in favour of South Africa-based National Pharmaceutical Company (NatPharm) for a $5.6m tender to supply COVID-19 materials. Local sources note that the allegations against Mangwiro have drawn attention away from the $60m scandal highlighted by Chin’ono.

Finance minister Mthuli Ncube has set aside ZWL$3.6 billion (roughly $44m) in the 2021 National Budget, presented on 26 November (see below), to fight corruption.8

“The fund is set to empower the ZACC, the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA), the Zimbabwe Republic Police (Minerals, Flora and Fauna Unit), the Auditor General and the Procurement Regulatory Authority of Zimbabwe, as they all require capacitация to enable their effectiveness.”9

Ncube presents infrastructure-oriented 2021 budget

Ncube presented the 2021 National Budget statement on 27 November, emphasising the need to fast-track infrastructure development for growth. The 2021 Budget includes a ZWL$5.5 billion ($67m) allocation for:

- Mineral and agro-processing programmes for value addition, value chains and beneficiation;
- Equipping training and institutions with state-of-the-art infrastructure;
- Engaging private, public and other stakeholders to develop state of the art research infrastructure and cooperation mechanisms; and
- Strengthening Centres for Educational Research, Innovation and Development (CERIDs), among others.10

The budget highlights the opportunity to engage with the finance ministry and other government stakeholders for Fourth Industrial Revolution (4IR)-led investments (both finance and technical expertise). Collaboration with higher education institutions and research bodies is also a key area for investment in high-end scientific, technological, research and engineering skills, in line with global standards.11 The office of the president and cabinet (OPC) reported on 2 December that the government is working hard to ensure growth and development through various infrastructural development projects:

“So far, the President has presided over the commissioning of dams in different parts of the country such as Marovanyathi in Buhera, power generation projects in Infrastructure development is one of the Mnangagwa administration’s key focus areas, as noted in the National Development Strategy 1 (January 2021 – December 2025), published on 16 November. Key projects will include the upgrading of the Beitbridge-Harare-Chirundu route, which connects Zimbabwe to South Africa and Zambia, and serves as a regional land-link for the transportation of goods and people. Key infrastructure development goals include power generation to ensure uninterrupted power supply for residential, industrial, farming and mining purposes, a measure that is expected to positively impact overall economic performance.

Smart agriculture targets food security ...

To address the challenges of climate change in the country’s farming sector, the budget plan includes planning for “Smart Agriculture” alternatives. Proposed policies include the adoption of genetically modified (GM) farming practices despite controversy over the merits of genetic engineering. Companies seeking to invest in Zimbabwe’s 4IR-led agriculture initiatives will need to choose priority areas based on local needs-based assessments. The government will also look into promoting precision agriculture that uses information technology to ensure that crops and soil receive optimum health and productivity, in order to guarantee profitability, sustainability and protection of the environment.

The 4IR approach opens up the agriculture sector to investors and experts in farming technology. The now functional Zimbabwe Investment Development Agency (ZIDA) Act of February 2020 allows for the set-up of a “One-Stop-Shop” to ensure ease of doing business in the country. The agency has brought all agencies concerned with, or involved in, the approval and easing of investment decisions in the country into one office. This will ease the process of getting investment approval, particularly where non-residents are involved.

... as ZIDA seeks to improve mining sector governance

Weak governance in the mining sector remains a major limiting factor despite Zimbabwe’s rich resources of minerals including:

"... gold, Platinum Group Metals (PGMs), diamonds, coal, gemstones, granite, manganese, chrome, lithium, asbestos, iron ore, copper, nickel, cobalt, limestone, coal-bed methane (CBM) and rare earth minerals."

The ZIDA is expected to improve the ease of doing business in the mining sector by eliminating multiple administrative hurdles that constrained investment over the past decade. Further reforms will include:

"... the finalisation and implementation of mineral specific policy frameworks and a comprehensive review of the Gold Trade Act, Precious Stones Trade Act and amendment of the Mines and Minerals Act during the National Development Strategy 1 (January 2021 – December 2025) phase."

Mining rights for foreign investors have been linked to human rights violations and allegations of a lack of due diligence on the part of government officials. The Centre for Natural Resources Governance (CNRG) noted on 28 November that mining investors obtain formal licences from central government and relevant regulatory bodies, but fail to consult local communities. As a result, the entry of large-scale miners intrudes on the livelihood activities of small-scale miners and local communities centered on the mining deposits. Mutasa district residents claim that Chinese miner Zhongjin buried 10 artisanal miners on 11 November during a land reclamation exercise at Premier Gold Fields, which is owned by ZimGold Fields, a privately owned company. An unnamed group of Belarusian investors has also been accused of using plain-clothes and uniformed members of the police force to disperse artisanal miners at Premier Estates.

Impact of Covid-19: thriving under the new normal?

Zimbabwe’s economy was already ailing before COVID-19 and the ensuing global lockdowns struck, with high levels of unemployment and higher participation in the informal sector. In the five-year period preceding 2020, over 90% of Zimbabwe’s 6.3 million economically active citizens were employed in the informal sector. While the small and medium-sized enterprise (SME) sector played a positive role for the economic progress of the country, the Zimbabwe National Statistics Agency (ZimStats) reported that only 2.9 million people were formally employed in 2019:

“47% of persons in the 15-35 age bracket were not in employment, not in education and not in training.”

Lockdown measures led to the shutdown of informal markets,

“... as a result, informal workers struggle to find work, while access to food has become a key challenge for poor urban households”.

With fewer employment opportunities and the loss of income-generating sources for breadwinners, the economic outlook appears even bleaker. The United Nations World Food Programme (WFP), working in partnership with the Zimbabwe government and United States Agency for International Development (USAID) to disburse relief packages, including cash disbursements, to vulnerable citizens, predicts that by the end of 2020,

“... the number of food insecure people will have surged to 8.6 million – a staggering 60% of the population.”

The closure of ports of entry, especially borders with Botswana, Zambia, Mozambique and South Africa, key sites for cross-border trade and transportation of goods and people, has stifled opportunities for alternative livelihood activities. The cost of paying for COVID-19 tests in order to gain entry into the neighbouring country is currently beyond the reach of most. Lower levels of human movement within the region are likely to persist, with some who are willing to cross illegally doing so at the risk of losing their lives or being arrested.

COVID-19 has presented money transfer firms with the opportunity to gain from Africa-bound remittances, at least until levels of international travel rise. Diaspora remittances are an important source of foreign currency, since Zimbabwe has been experiencing shortages of United States dollars. Despite a slump in remittances globally, due to the economic impact of COVID-19, Reserve Bank of Zimbabwe (RBZ) governor John Mangudya noted that remittances increased by 45% from January to September.²⁹ Mangudya said this was because COVID-19 lockdowns had forced people to send money home via official channels, leading to increased formalisation of the economy.

“The diaspora remittances helped drive up foreign exchange inflows to $4.76 billion during the January-September period, up from $4.22 billion during the same period last year.”

Reuters reported on 19 November that:

“Africa-focused money transfer firms have seen a boom despite predictions from the World Bank of a historic 20% drop to $445 billion in remittances to poorer countries in 2020, due to the pandemic-induced economic slump worldwide.”

A peak in remittances over the Christmas period could ease some of Zimbabwe’s foreign currency challenges. However, a decrease in travel to home countries will negatively impact foreign currency generated by airlines, tourism service providers, event organisers and other local businesses, which often experience a boom during the festive season.
